

The good student

At the Faculty of Humanities we would like all students to take responsibility for their own learning and contribute constructively to the common quality culture.

Therefore, we would like each student to:

- Relate critically and reflectively to his or her studies
- Participate constructively in classes throughout the semester
- Help his or her fellow students participate constructively in classes
- Know his or her curriculum
- Study full-time and view his or her studies as the main occupation
- Check his or her UCPH email regularly
- Stay up to date through his or her programme's study pages on KUnet and Absalon regarding
 - registration, withdrawal, and submission deadlines
 - semester plan updates
 - exam times
 - academic events outside classes
- Prepare thoroughly in order to
 - explore new academic concepts ahead of class
 - be able to ask relevant questions during class
 - be able to take part in a discussion about the text with his or her fellow students
- Not just want to meet the requirements, but to contribute independently (e.g. in connection with presentations and assignments)
- Work with his or her fellow students in raising each other's academic levels outside classes, e.g. by means of study groups, discussion forums, academic sparring, and sparring on assignments
- Use the course evaluation to provide constructive criticism of the classes
- Give the teacher feedback, not only through evaluation
- Help the teacher create a good social atmosphere
- Take a responsibility for the study environment in order to
 - feel at home in it him- or herself
 - make it possible for fellow students to feel at home in it
 - help new students feel at home in it.
